LIGHT SEEDINGS OF CRESTED WHEAT GRASS

(Manyberries Experimental Station)
Some interesting results have been obtained at this station from a project designed to determine how rapidly very thin stands of crested wheat grass will thicken up to the point that will assure maximum forage and production.

In 1938 crested wheat grass seed was broadcast by hand on abandoned farm land at rates of one to three pounds per acre. By 1938 very thin stands of grass were appearing, and from 5 to 15 plants were charted per square metre quadrat. This worked out to a density of ground cover that varied from one-half percent to two percent. In the fall of 1940 these plots were recharted and it was found that the number of plants per quadrat had increased more than threefold. From 20 to 140 plants were charted on the same quadrats. In addition many small seedlings were also noted. At the present time the density of this grass cover ranges from four to eight percent.

It can be assumed that with favorable conditions this stand of grass will continue to thicken up at the same rate for the next year or two. By this time it may have a density of ground that is equal to or better than the native prairie in the same area. Such a cover will assure maximum production of either hay or pasture, depending upon the amount of rainfall received.

These results would indicate the practicability of rehabilitating abandoned farm lands by seeding crested wheat grass at rates as low as one pound per acre. In four to six years such seedings promise to produce worth-while stands if the grass is grazed only in the fall, winter, and very early spring so that it will have an opportunity to set seed each year.

Such light seedings mean that a limited amount of seed will cover a relatively large area of land, and eventually produce an economical stand of grass. The length of time required to obtain such a stand will, however, be materially reduced as the rate of seeding is increased to the optimum of 5 to 6 per acre.

COST OF HANDLING WHEAT CUT BY LINE ELEVATORS

In face of the emergency situation brought about through the quota on deliveries of farmers' wheat at country elevators, all line elevators have issued instructions to their agents to increase the price for all grades of Board street wheat by one-half of one cent per bushel, effective immediately, according to a statement issued today by A. C. Reid, president of the North-West Line Elevators Association.

In addition to increasing the price by one-half cent per bushel the line elevator companies will refund one-half cent per bushel to all farmers who have delivered Board street wheat to line elevators since August 1st.

This decision was made in an effort to meet the emergency situation brought about by the shortage of storage space and the consequent quota system.

In spite of the fact that the carlot quantity was reduced to 750 bushels, some producers were unable on account of the quota to deliver that amount and secure track price. It is to compensate such cases that the street flat price is advanced one-half cent per bushel.

The Park Lane Mystery

By Edgar Wallace

CHAPTER XXIII.—Continued

He had to sit on the steps for a long time before he was sufficiently calm to go in. Listening at the door before he opened it, he crept into the hall, closed the door without a sound and tiptoed to his study. He was wet through and shivering. The suitcases were shining like patent leather. He took off his drenched overcoat and rang the bell. The maid who presently appeared was surprised to see him.

"I thought, sir—," she began, but he cut her short.

"Go up to my room—don't make a noise—and bring me down a complete change. You may tell your mistress that I shall not be up for some time."

Poking the meager fire, he warmed his hands at the blaze. The girl came back with a bundle of clothes, announced her intention of making him a cup of tea, and discreetly retired.

Mr. Ellensbury started to change when a thought occurred to him. He might have to change again. His trousers were not very wet. And round about the pit was very muddy. He had thought of the pit in the car. Fate was working for him.

He put on his dressing gown and took down from a shelf two volumes which he had often read. The Chronicles of Crime they were called—a record of drab evil told in the stilted style of their Early Victorian editor. They were each "embellished with fifty-two illustrations by 'Phiz'."

He opened a volume at random. " * * * when a female, young, beautiful and innocent, is the victim of oppression, there is no man with common feelings who would not risk his life to snatch her from despair and misery. * * * "

This little bit of moralizing was the sentence he read. He turned the page, unconscious of its irony.

Maria Marten—shot in a barn. There was another woman killed with a sword. He turned the leaves impatiently, regretted at that moment so little acquaintance with the criminal bar. There was a large ax—where? Outside the kitchen door. He went down the kitchen stairs, passing the maid on her way up. Just outside the kitchen door, in the very place where he had seen it that morning. He brought it upstairs under his dressing gown.

"You may go to bed," he said to the maid, and when he had drunk his cup of tea he heaved on his wet overcoat and went out into the storm.

How very unpleasant! * * * Why couldn't they let him go away quietly? * * * an old man—white-haired, with only a few years to live? Tears rolled down his cheeks at the injustice of his treatment. It was Harlow! Damn Harlow! This poor girl, who had done nobody any harm—a beautiful creature who must die because of Harlow!

He dashed the wet tears from his eyes with the back of his hand, lifted off the padlock, and threw open the door.

The candle had burned down to its last flicker of life, but in that fraction of light, before the wick sank blue into oblivion, he saw the white face of the girl as she stood, frozen with horror. Ellensbury swung his ax with a sob.

CHAPTER XXIV.

When Mr. Elk went into the office of his friend that afternoon, he found Jim engrossed in a large street plan that was spread out on the table. It had evidently been specially drawn or copied for his purpose, for there was a smudge of green ink where his sleeve had brushed.

"Buying house property?" asked Elk.

Jim rolled up the plan carefully and put it into his drawer.

"The real estate business," Elk went on, "is the easiest way of getting money I know. You can't be pinched for it, and there's no comeback. Friend of mine bought a cow field at Finchley and built a lot of ready-to-wear villas on it—he drives his own Ford nowadays. I know another man—"

"Would you like to assist me in a burglary to-night?" interrupted Elk.

"Burglary is my long suit," said Elk. "I remember once—"

"There was a time," mused Jim, "when I could climb like a cat, though I've not seen a cat go up the side of a house, and I've never quite understood how 'cat burglar' can be an apt description."

"Short, for caterpillar," suggested Elk. "They can walk up glass owing to the suckers on their big feet. That's natural history the same as flies. Where's the 'bust'?"

"Park Lane, no less," replied Jim. "My scheme is to inspect one of the stately homes of England—the ancestral castle of Baron Harlow."

"He ain't been knighted, has he?" asked Elk who had the very haziest ideas about the peerage. "Though I don't see why he shouldn't be; if—," (he mentioned an illustrious political figure) "was in office, Harlow would have been a duke by now, or an earl or something."

Jim looked out of the window at the Thames embankment, crowded at this rush hour with homeward-bound workers. It was raining heavily, and half a gale was blowing. Certainly the fog which had been predicted by the weather bureau showed no sign of appearance.

"The weather people are letting me down," he said; "unless there's a fog we shall have to postpone operations till to-morrow night."

Elk, who had certain views on the weather bureau, expressed them at length. But he had also something encouraging to say.

"Fog is no more use to a burglar than a bandaged eye. Rain that keeps policemen in doorways and stops amacher snooping is weather from heaven for the burglar."

Rain was falling in sheets on the Thames embankment when the police car, which Jim Carlton drove, came through the arterial gateway, and at the corner of Birdcage Walk he met a wind that almost overturned the car. He was blown across to Hyde Park corner.

No. 703, Park Lane was one of the few houses in that thoroughfare which was not only detached from other houses but was surrounded by a wall. It could boast that beyond the library annex was a small garden, in which a cherry tree flourished. A police sergeant specially detailed for the service appeared out of the muck and took charge of the car. In two minutes they were over the wall, dragging after them the book-laden which had been borrowed during the afternoon from fire headquarters.

The domed skylight of the library was in darkness and they gained its roof with little trouble. Here Jim left Elk as an advanced post. He had no illusions as to the difficulty of his task. All the upper windows were barred or secured by shutters; but that afternoon he had sent a low-flying aeroplane across the park and had secured an aerial photograph which showed a little brick building on the roof, which was probably a stair cover and held a door that gave entrance to the floors below.

Jim drew himself up to the level of the first window, the bars of which made climbing a comparatively easy matter, and, detaching the hook of the ladder, he reached up and gripped the bars of the window above. Fortunately he was on the lee side of Greenhart House and the wind that shrieked at its corners did not greatly hamper him.

In ten minutes he was on the flat roof of the house, walking with difficulty in his felt-soled shoes toward the square brick shed. Now he caught the full force of the gale and was glad of the shelter which the parapet afforded.

As he had expected, in the brick superstructure there was a stout door, fastened by a patent lock. Probably it was bolted as well. He listened, but could hear nothing above the howl of the wind, and then continued his search, keeping the rays of his powerful hand lamp within a few inches of the roof. There was nothing to be discovered here, and he returned to the stairway. From his pocket he took a leather case of tools, fitted a small auger into a bit, and pushed it in the thickness of the door. He had not gone far before the point of the bit ground against something hard. The door was steel lined. Replacing the tool, he pulled himself up to the roof of the shed, and he had to grip the edge to prevent being blown off.

The roof was of solid concrete, and it would need a sledge hammer and unlimited time to break through. Possibly there was an unguarded window, though he did not remember having seen any. He leaned across the parapet and looked down into the side street that connected Park Lane with the thoroughfare where he had left his car. As he did so, he saw a man walk briskly up to the door, open it and enter. The sound of the slamming door came up to him. It was obviously Harlow; no other man had that peculiar swing of shoulders in his walk. What had he been doing out on such a night? Then it occurred to Jim that he had come from the direction of his garage.

Treating The Blind

Medical Science Is Making Remarkable Advances In Recent Years

In connection with the treatment of eye disorders, medical science is constantly breaking new ground. At a convention of medical men held in Memphis recently, one investigator reported that he had obtained substantially satisfactory results in the treatment of some forms of deterioration of the optic nerve by draining the sinuses. At the same meeting another doctor reported that his investigations had shown that certain types of cataract were not due directly to a condition in the eye itself, but to the fact that improper or unsuitable diets had led to a condition in the eye which made it particularly susceptible to the growth of cataract.—National News of the Blind.

A Reasonable Request

London Theatrical Man Appeared To Have Edge On Policeman

Richard Brinsley Sheridan, the famous playwright, was sitting in the House of Commons when news was brought that his Drury Lane theatre was on fire. Excusing himself, he made his way quickly to the scene of the conflagration.

He found the approach to the fire blocked by a great crowd, and it was with considerable difficulty that he showed his way to the front and climbed under the ropes. A burly policeman roughly shoved him back into the crowd.

"I say," protested Sheridan, as pleasantly as the circumstances would permit, "surely a man may warm himself by his own fire."

The British Navy

The Most Important Factor In The Defence Of Britain

Sir Howard d'Egville, organizer and secretary of the Empire Parliamentary Association, credited the British fleet alone with "enabling the war to be carried on at all" in a speech delivered to a joint luncheon meeting of the Canadian and Empire clubs at Toronto.

"Great credit must also be given to the air force, of course," he said, "but by far the most important factor in the defence of Britain has been the unceasing vigilance of the navy. Not only the fate of the British Isles, but the effectiveness of the Monroe doctrine depend in the main on the British fleet."

BRITISH AND GREEKS FIGHT SIDE BY SIDE

It seems fitting indeed that Great Britain and the Greeks should be standing side by side defending Democracy against a common enemy. Democracy, or those principles of freedom and liberty which insists that the individual citizen is superior to the state, and shall not be merely the pawn of a monarch or of a dictator, was first invented by Solon the Greek in the year 594 B. C. and was actually put into practice as a system of Government in Athens—with a deliberative assembly which sat continuously throughout the year to design laws and to govern the country—in 503 B. C.

This system of Democracy was eventually lost by the Greeks, but the English won it back for the common people when King John was obliged to sign the great Magna Carta at Runnymede on July 15th, 1215.

Today these dearly won rights and liberties are again in danger, and it seems more than mere coincidence that the Greeks, who originally discovered democracy and put it practically to work, and the British, who restored it to the world, should be fighting side by side to maintain these precious rights of the individual; and fighting, moreover, on the very same Grecian soil and seas where Democracy was won originally won by the Greeks in 594 B.C., 2,443 years ago.
